Big and Bright

Like

G+1

Because it's based on lasers rather than expensive lamps that eventually burn out, NEC's PX803UL large-venue projector can end up saving money. Here's how: At $17,000 it isn't cheap, but its illumination engine is rated to last 20,000 hours, or roughly 15 years of daily use. That could add up to something like 6 or 7 lamp changes that might cost several thousand dollars, not to mention the time lost to actually swap the lamps. Rated at 8,000 lumens, the WUXGA (1,920 by 1,200 resolution) projector not only starts faster than traditional projectors, but delivers a clear and bright image. Happily, it uses the same lenses as the existing PX family of projectors, including the new ultra-short throw lens. NEC's Star Student program extends the projector's warranty by two years.

COMMENTS

We have installed this projector for some of our clients and I have to say that there is no comparison, the price may be steep but it's worth it.
